

The “Almost Independent” Trap

JOURNAL
OF THE
AMERICAN GERIATRICS
SOCIETY

“Older adults with mild functional limitations are at significantly higher risk for hospitalization than those with either full independence or full support.”

What is the “Almost Independent” Trap?

It’s the space where a senior can still...

- Get up on their own.
- Prepare simple meals.
- Manage parts of their routine.

But is quietly struggling with...

- Balance
- Consistency
- Energy
- Judgment

The Hidden Adjustments Seniors Make

To stay “independent,” many seniors quietly...

- Stop showering as often.
- Avoid stairs or certain rooms.
- Eat less complicated meals (or skip meals altogether).
- Limit movement to avoid fatigue or pain.

Why this Stage is Dangerous

This is when...

- Falls happen unexpectedly.
- Nutrition declines.
- Medication mistakes increase.
- Hospitalizations begin.

Not because of one big issue, but because of a series of small compromises.

Reframing for Families

Support doesn’t mean taking independence away. It means...

- ✓ Preserving energy.
- ✓ Reducing risk.
- ✓ Extending the ability to stay at home.

The National Institute on Aging reports that subtle functional decline often goes unreported and unnoticed until a major event occurs.

Support before the Crisis

We step in during the “almost independent” stage when the right support can prevent the next fall, hospitalization, or setback.
